TANGLA: Yet another wild elephant died a hard death three days after it sustained injury inside a dense jungle along the Indo-Bhutan border in Udalguri district on Tuesday.

A firewood collector discovered the full grown animal three days back and passed the information to the forest department. But of no avail.

Three days after an intense battle with life, the elephant died and the villagers spotted the carcass in the morning on the Bhorla river bordering Bhutan sending huge shockwave among the animal lovers who blamed it all on the forest authority for failing to provide adequate treatment to the animal which was battling with death for three months.
