The rural electrification scheme has been failing to percolate benefit for the poor people living in Assam. This was what came to light when power minister Pradyut Bordoloi has to face a barrage of criticism and questions on the fourth day of the Assam Assembly's winter session on Thursday.

As soon as the question hour began at nine in the morning, several members on the floor raised questions on the benefit of the rural electrification schemes for the BPL families. They said the scheme has yet to cover thousands of remote villages which have not been able to see the light of success in the scheme.

In his reply power minister Pradyut Bordoloi assured said that the government would take steps to uplift these areas with the help of rural electrification.
