New Delhi: Senior journalist Sangeeta Barooah Pisharoty has created history by becoming the first woman to be elected President of the Press Club of India (PCI), marking a significant milestone in the institution's long-standing legacy. Her election is being widely hailed as a landmark moment for gender representation and leadership in Indian journalism.

A respected name in the profession, Pisharoty is known for her incisive reporting, editorial leadership and long-standing commitment to press freedom, ethical journalism and the welfare of media professionals. Over the years, she has earned wide credibility for her work on politics, governance and social issues.

The Press Club of India, one of the country's most prestigious bodies representing journalists, has played a crucial role in upholding democratic values and providing a collective platform for media voices. Pisharoty's elevation to the top post is seen as both a recognition of her professional stature and a progressive step towards inclusivity in media institutions.

Her election has drawn congratulatory messages from journalists, media organisations and civil society members across the country, who see her leadership as an opportunity to further strengthen the role of the PCI in safeguarding journalistic rights and freedoms in challenging times.
